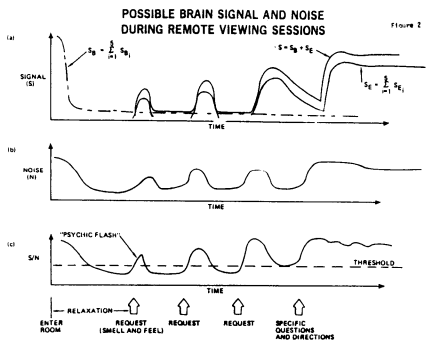

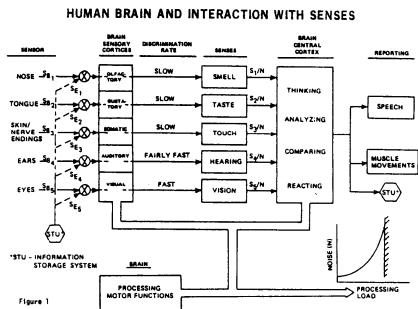

Figure 1 is a concept of how the brain and mind function. The physical brain is like a radar, transmitting and receiving information into and from some kind of central storage system which exists in some dimension other than our three space dimensions and time. The cortexes in our physical brain act like computers processing the information. Figure 1 shows the various brain cortexes into which the physical body sensors are sending signals to be processed internally and produce what we perceive as sensory information. The results are then passed to the central cortex which then processes that information to produce data about which we think, analyze, and react. We then report this information through muscle movements or speech. Most importantly, the information is constantly being transmitted and filed into a central storage unit which is called the "STU" or Space Time Unit. Simultaneously there is another full set of sensory input data being received by our brain. The "mind" is the information transfer mechanism which brings this information to and from the storage unit. This model assumes memory is not stored in our physical brain. When you learn to work with both the physical sensory input and the sensory input from the mind, you can then access any person's memory (mind reading) or information about any place on earth (remote reviewing).

When the physical brain is processing information, it is producing a background brain noise. Each synapse firing produces a little bit of noise. The overall background brain noise is the accumulation of the noise from all of the brain processing. There is a relationship between this background noise and the total processing load of the brain, as shown schematically in Figure 1. By learning how to work with the signal-to-noise level, both from the normal physical senses and by reducing the background brain noise, you can access information by the external remote signal input which includes memory and remote information. Figure 1 is described in more detail in Reference 2.

Figure 2 shows how these signals vary with time in a typical remote viewing session. As the physical body signals input to the brain are reduced, the background brain noise is also reduced. The most important parameter is the signal-to-noise ratio. As requests for remote information are made, the mind becomes connected to the target (e.g., remote place) and external sensory information begins to come into your perception. As this sensory input comes in, you can't help but begin to analyze it. That analysis causes the background brain noise to increase and the weak input signal is squelched. This phenomenon is called a "psychic flash." If you then continue to analyze, you create information from your own "world-line" and memory associations with which you will begin to overlay the information. If you try to associate the external information with what it is "like," it will usually be wrong (Reference 3). People should try not to do analytical analysis and the request for information should be repeated often. The viewer should start with trying to perceive information with the slow senses and eventually work up to the faster senses (i.e., auditory and visual.) By boot strapping the remote information up from the slow senses, some people eventually become so well connected to the target that they feel like they are at the remote site and perceive information that is quite accurate.

Figure 3 is a pictorial representation of this storage system, the "STU". It is not known where the STU is, but a lot of models invoke some kind of a storage system of all events. Think about it being in another dimension from our normally perceived three-dimensional space and time. This model assumes information about all past events and all possible future events is in the STU. This is represented by a big ellipsoid in Figure 3. When a two-dimensional plane, used to represent our three-dimensional reality, is passed through the STU, the resulting ellipse, at any given instant in time, represents our universe as we perceive it. This ellipse moves forward along a line perpendicular to this two-dimensional plane in time. This line is called our "world line." As a person's ability to access remote information is increased, he/she begins to have access to both space and time around him/her. The circles in Figure 3 are supposed to represent this access as more signals from remote places can be accessed. In addition to all sensory input being stored, some parameter proportional to emotional intensity history is also stored in the STU. This emotional history acts like a beacon signal in time for the mind to tune on. Similarly, this parameter does not seem to be unique to human emotion (e.g., mountains seem to store a significant peak "emotional" event during a volcanic eruption). This model suggests that the mind scans in time, locks onto a peak emotional event, and then that information is accessible by the human brain, not limited by space or time.

Figure 4 represents the macro-quantum-mechanical idea that you collapse the Schrödinger wave functions of all matter that you currently perceive. You are constantly filing this information into the storage system (STU). When you think back to what is called a "memory", you can see, hear, and feel information from an event in your past. Similarly, when you perceive possible future information, you can see, hear, and feel that information, much like you perceive a memory. When you look into the future, you temporarily collapse the macro-Schrödinger wave functions associated with everything at that future event, as the wave functions exist as the current time. You can then store this information about the future event into the STU and it then becomes accessible as a memory. As you move forward in time, there might be changes in the Schrödinger wave functions for that future event, because people may change their decision about something. When you get to that perceived future event, it may be changed. An example is the case where you may look forward in time and see yourself at some intersection. Then down the street comes a yellow car. As you step off the curb, you get hit and killed. You may not like that. In the future, you may happen to arrive at that intersection and have a "deja vu experience". This time you see the yellow car coming down the street, and as you are stepping off the curb, you can either go ahead and get hit, or use your own will power and step back up on the curb. If you step back, all the probable futures for everyone and everything associated with that event have to be reshuffled to become new sets of macro-Schrödinger wave functions.

Assume that the emotional history shown in Figure 5 is for some remote target in another part of the world. Also assume that a remote reviewer has the intent to access information at that target. He will have some emotion associated with that effort which still may be small compared to other emotional events at that place in space. If the remote viewer does not pay a lot of attention to specifying TIME and SCALE SIZE, then when his mind reaches the target place, it may scan in time, much like a radio that scans in frequency and locks onto a radio station signal. The mind scans backward or forward in time and locks onto a peak emotional event. As most meditators know, you throw away those first thoughts and “let go” of the first few emotional peaks that the mind locks onto. This reduces the detection threshold down to peaks that are associated more closely with time now, and thus you begin to get information at that target place close to the current time. Using the chart shown in Figure 5, the author hypothesized that, if you want experiments to work in the paranormal areas, you need to increase the emotional intensity associated with the current time at the target point and then the mind will lock onto “now”. You will get the information and effects you want.

PK means psychokinesis, or mind over matter. Time shifts that occur in a lot of paranormal phenomena such as telepathy, psychometry, mind reading, past lives, and psychic healing can be studied in the context of the mind scanning forward and backward in time and locking onto peak emotional events. This model may not be right, but it is a simple construct that gives a structure for how to think about conducting experiments with paranormal phenomena which will lead to improved results and understanding.

Many researchers talk about space-time maps. Figure 6 is an attempt to show this. My model relates to the normal space-time map (three-dimensional space axis vs time). In conventional physics, there is the velocity of light limit. Dr. Elizabeth Rauscher has a complex geometry model that allows for time shifts within that space-time map (Reference 4). By adding the dimension of emotional intensity to the space-time map, then many more things become understandable. Figure 7 is the same three-coordinate axis, rotated to show a person's world line moving along in time and space, having little emotional ups and downs. If there is a big emotional event, a person will find his perception of time slowing down. As you perceive time along your world line, a big emotional peak will cause you to experience "real time" being very slow. Diagramming experiments in the coordinate system of emotional space-time can be very useful.

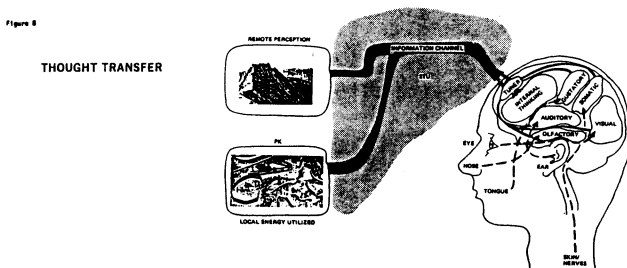

Figure 8 is a summary chart of this conceptual model showing a physical brain doing all this processing, taking information from our physical sensors plus the mind connected to the information storage system (STU). A human is able to connect both to remote places for remote perception and psychokinesis. By sending a command across this mind channel linked to a remote place or object, one can affect things in addition to perceiving information about them.

Dr. Abrams' discovery has become known as radiesthesia or radionics. It has been further developed by a number of people of which I believe George De la Warr from England is the most famous. Common for all these people is that they had to do their work in secrecy and with their own money, because they have always been haunted by the medical profession.

Radionics has been prevented from getting scientific attention because it cannot be seen or measured, as yet. It can only be felt by some, and the success of a radionic treatment is therefore dependent upon the operator's ESP or psychic skills. This is unacceptable from a scientific point of view.

For those who know nothing about radionics I will briefly explain how it is believed to work.

Ernest Rutherford showed us how everything in the world consists of molecules which again are built up of atoms from the fundamental elements. An atom is composed of a nucleus surrounded with electrons orbiting at different levels. The electrons are constantly moving, and therefore there is nothing dead or motionless in this world, motion representing energy. Every atom represents a certain amount of energy, and has its own particular vibratory rate. The vibratory rate can be defined by the number of electrons orbiting the nucleus at different levels.

It was Niels Bohr who put all this in order and showed how many electrons there were in each level for all of the about 100 fundamental elements. All matter consists of a mixture of these elements, and any mixture has its own vibratory rate which is different from any other particular mixture.

Each living cell consists of millions of atoms and they have their own particular vibratory rate. There is one particular vibratory rate for a group of cells which form an organ. There is a slight difference in vibratory rate from cell to cell in the same organ, but collectively they form one particular vibratory rate, which is the same for all individuals. In other words, liver cells have a vibratory rate entirely different from kidney cells, but liver cells from humans and other mammals have the same vibratory rate.

Cells with the same vibratory rate will attract each other, while cells with different vibratory rates will repel each other. The more healthy a cell is, the better it can resist the invasion of foreign substances.

Cells differ from other matter in that they are alive, and as other living things, they need nourishment and the release of waste products. Electricity and magnetism are, in my opinion, the two fundamental elements which keep cells alive. Each cell is in itself a small power station with transmitter and receiver which keeps it in constant communication with other cells in a body. This has been suggested by the Russian scientist Lakhovsky.

Dr. Abrams showed how healthy cells can react violently when cancerous cells are brought close to them. Without touching, they prepare for an assault, which was noticeable when palpating the abdominal skin. It was apparent that the healthy cells could feel a destructive force at a distance.

Dr. Abrams also showed that the vibratory rate of diseased cells could be changed to that of healthy cells when exposed to the vibration of a proper remedy. He showed this by simulating quinine with malaria-infected cells, and comparing mercury with syphillis-infected cells.

From the above it is apparent that if we could only simulate these so-called vibratory rates mechanically or electrically, we would also be able to create remedies in this manner. It is remarkable that Dr. Abrams actually got a long way doing this electronically — and this was in the days of 1914 when electronics was in its stone age.

Many have since improved on Dr. Abrams' instrument and many have been very successful treating diseases which orthodox medicine has not been able to do. However, the developments during these past seventy years have not been spectacular compared to other electronic developments.

I believe that the most advanced radionic equipment today is EMOPATH made by Electro Medica Office in Toronto. This instrument was developed by a great Canadian doctor by the name of Wilmot Bright Browett who was a naturopathic physician and chiropractor. He died in 1982, at 91 years of age.

The function of a radionic instrument cannot be explained with known physical laws. It is merely the laws of quantum theory that apply.

As an example, I will set up the vibratory rate for mercury. According to Niels Bohr's periodic table, Mercury is element number eighty, because it has eighty electrons orbiting the nucleus. It belongs to period number six because the electrons are distributed in six different orbits. The number is:

8	1.8	3.2	.	1.8	2
2nd	3rd	4th		5th	6th

This is the basic number which needs the addition of a qualifying number in order to fully simulate the vibration of mercury. This additional number is:

1	6.	02	2.	2	1	2.006
---	----	----	----	---	---	-------

Where: 1 = Element, 6. = Period, 02 = Group Number, 2. = Base*, 1 = Metal**, and 2.006 = Atomic Weight.

*1. Acid; 3. Neutral; **2. Non-metal; 3. Radioactive; 4. Gas; 5. Rare earth.

Niels Bohr distributed all elements in eight groups according to how the last two orbits were built up of electrons. This left all rare earth metals without group classification. Dr. Browett claimed that his instrument could prove that the last three orbits are not built up as suggested by Niels Bohr and that the periodic table should consist of twenty-five groups instead of just eight.

As you can see, the set-up of a radionic instrument in order to simulate the vibratory rate of a cell, or group of cells (tissue) is not a numerical setting, like you would set up a frequency on a radio. It is merely a matter of comparing one proportion to another. Not only can you simulate matter and substances, you can simulate any form of energy.

This can be done with pin-point accuracy on the EMOPATH instrument because a proportion ratio of 1:999 billion is possible. No other instrument can do this. Most other types of radionic instruments have only banks with six dials and the tuning of them is coarse and general.

Dr. Browett called the function of this instrument Electronic Homeopathy because he believed that it worked like a homeopathic remedy. He described the function of it like that of a radio station silencing another radio station by sending out a carrier wave at the exact same frequency. If some cells are invaded or their normal functions blocked by an abnormality, then you can eliminate the invader by directing vibratory rates equal to the invader at the particular cells. According to Dr. Browett, this is the way the body's own defence system works. If there are no cells present in the body with that particular vibratory rate, it will try to make some. If this is being done too slowly, you can swallow a homeopathic remedy which contains the invader's vibratory rate. The remedy is so diluted that it can do no harm, but there are enough vibrations in it so that it, together with the body's own defence system, can eliminate the invader and normal cell functions can again be restored.

It is all a matter of simulating the vibratory rate of a disease and directing it to its location. This can be done when you know the vibratory rate of the cells. Then the disease can be destroyed and eliminated. Since Dr. Browett's instrument can simulate the atomic structure itself, it can simulate anything in existence. He compares his instrument to a radionic instrument in the following way:

"Electronic Homeopathy is not radionics as it is usually practised in many parts of the world. Although much help has been given to patients through radionics, radionics is concerned mainly with the general field of each problem, and much of its findings are due to the skill and ESP of the operator, more than to the instrument itself. The findings by radionics are often time consuming, and the treatment rather general or vague, whereas in Electronic Homeopathy Therapy the instrument finds quickly and exactly, even to the finest detail, where and what the trouble is, and treats directly the problem in that affected area, so that it may be removed from the body."

Dr. Browett worked practically day and night the last twenty years of his life finding vibratory rates for body tissues and for elements that could attack the body. He had thousands of tissue slides and found the numbers by placing them under a microscope. The rates are contained in two large-size ring binders. The vibratory rates are given for practically every area of the body. For example, there are rates for seven hundred different hormone-producing tissues in the body. There are three hundred different tissue rates, all located in the small hypothalamus. You can more than just tune in to every single tooth in the mouth, you can tune in to thirty-five different tissues relating to a particular tooth. Other radionic units can only tune in to large areas of the body. Take the kidney as an example. Perhaps they can tune in to anterior and posterior parts, perhaps to medulla, cortex and renal parts, but that would be all. Dr. Browett provides more than three hundred tissue rates just for the kidney tubules. For every one of them he has provided information as to their resorptive function.

For Dr. Browett this instrument was not just a tool for healing people, it was a research instrument which provided him with more anatomic information than could be achieved by normal research for decades. As an example he has shown that the emotional system is not just something strange in the lymphatic area, as medical books tell us. Dr. Browett has outlined on body charts how the emotional system is located on males and females and how the different emotional rings, spikes and tubes are connected with pathways. All vibratory numbers are included with these body charts, and the treatment of this system is just as effective as treating any other system or organ. The importance of the emotional system is not ignored by other radionic operators. They just call it by other names, such as chakras, etc.

The rate books contain numbers for most diseases. There are numbers for seventy different fungi, seventy bacteria, seventy viruses, eighty different mixed infections. There are numbers for chemicals and sprays. According to Dr. Browett all chemical elements can be either organic, inorganic or radioactive in nature and different numbers apply. There are numbers for four hundred different parasites. Every treatment of infections or parasites must be followed by a clean-up procedure. Gallstones, kidney stones and blood clots are very easily treated with this instrument. When a disease is widely spread in the body, it can be an advantage to potentize a homeopathic remedy with the instrument. This is very easy to do and can save treatment time. Should one want to consider other remedies, they can check with the instrument first to see just how effective that remedy is. Likewise, the instrument can be used to check foods of any kind; what is most beneficial and what the patient should not eat. With the instrument you can measure body temperature, blood pressure, R.B.C. and W.B.C., content in sugar and uric, stomach acid and various other things.

For general treatment purposes the instrument is very simple to use. Everything is built up in a sequence of numbers, so that diseased tissues can quickly be found. When you see a patient for the first time it is a good idea to spend five minutes measuring the function of the ten main organs and ten different systems, plus the function of the four main glands, the skeletal body and the mucosas. This, together with five minutes of talk with the patient will give you a good picture of the general health and where to start your treatments.

The procedure is to first locate the problem, then to find what the problem exactly is. Next, switch on the treatment code. These are all given in the rate books. This whole procedure takes less than five minutes when you have some experience. The treatment time varies from five minutes to one hour, mostly dependent on the size of the tissue area that has been tuned in to.

All rate sheets and a comprehensive instruction manual come with the instrument, with which one can learn how to operate the instrument. We consider that it takes twenty to forty hours of study and practice before one can start treating patients skillfully. This is because of the great detail involved, as well as the fact that some hours of practice are required to develop a special fingertip sensation. Some people have a notion of this the first time they try. For others it may take some weeks of daily practice. For most, it takes a couple of months before this so-called "rubbing-plate stick" becomes firm and settled. At this time one need not think about what is being felt in the fingertips. It is like learning how to ride a bicycle. In the beginning you must concentrate; later you keep the balance without knowing how. In our experience, ESP or psychic abilities are of no advantage.

The instrument has no limit. You can carry out research and keep finding new methods for the rest of your life. It is impossible to cover everything in an instruction manual. Therefore, twice a year, all operators will be invited to Toronto for a two-day free seminar for the purpose of sharing experiences and to help each other answer questions.

The current price for the instrument including all rate sheets and the instruction manual is $5,000.00 Canadian or approximately $4,000.00 U.S.

Electro Medica Office in Toronto has developed another instrument which is much more simple but in line with Dr. Browett's principles. This instrument is called COLIGHT and treats with colours rather than quantum vibratory rates, as described above.

Biological cells are mainly sensitive to sound and to colours. This is why we can hear and see. Our theory is, that sound resonates with the whole cell masses, the frequency being from one hundred to ten thousand Hertz or pulses per second. The visible light frequency is between four hundred and eight hundred mega mega Hertz or  $400-800 \times 10$  to the 12th pulses per second. This frequency resonates with the twisted filament within the cell, as described by Lakhovsky. For this reason, sound waves and light waves are two very powerful sources with which you can manipulate cell functions.

COLIGHT has built in to it Dr. Browett's vibratory rate for the human body. It has three modifier banks with a total of sixteen dials. These are used to locate a problem and can be tuned in to major tissues in the body.

There are then three dials with twelve positions, each position having a different colour. Up to three different colours can be mixed, and thus, over seventeen hundred different colour hues can be produced with these three dials.

It is an exciting instrument to operate, because one can feel on the rubbing plate when a beneficial colour has been selected. Each of the three dials gives you a powerful "stick" when the best colour has been selected, and this is the treatment. There is nothing more to it. It is of no help to study colour therapy.

With COLIGHT you can also diagnose, but this is not necessary in order to treat. One can also measure body temperature, blood pressure, number of blood cells, contents in uric, stomach acid etc.

The treatments with colours are more powerful than the treatments with the EMOPATH instrument. Each treatment usually lasts about five minutes only, and the patient can usually feel the treatments. One should stay with the instrument and follow the progress of treatments. This is done by measuring the vitality rate of the organ being treated. This rate is always boosted by fifty to seventy points when a beneficial colour combination is switched on. During the treatment, it drops off again and when it comes down to near its initial value, another colour combination is found. This is repeated about five times and then when the colours are switched off, one should be able to measure a permanent increase in organ function, and the patient should feel better.

The top bank on the instrument, with six dials, is normally used to measure the progression of treatments. The two lower banks are used to locate and tune in to the diseased tissue. One bank can be the vibratory rate of the whole organ or a structural part of the body. The other can then be used to specify a certain part of that organ or structure, for example, lymph, artery, skin or bone, etc.

Similar to the EMOPATH instrument, COLIGHT can be used to potentize homeopathic remedies, and to select the best food or herb. In other words, having this instrument you will no longer be working in the dark, wondering if this or that medicine or ointment is beneficial. The instrument will tell you exactly how good or bad a certain remedy is, not just for the whole body, as it can tell you how effective it is for any part of the body. A remedy is sometimes found that appears harmful to the entire body, but it can be beneficial for a certain organ which has to be cured. It can solve all the puzzles you may have about your drinking water or favourite beer or liquor. The instruments reveal not just bad news for most whiskies and brandies; they are bad news for pasteurized and homogenized milk and many fruit juices. If all people used the instrument for selecting their best wine, there would be no more antifreeze or other harmful chemicals in the products.

The purchase price for the COLIGHT instrument including the rate sheets, description and operating instructions is $2,000.00 Canadian or about $1,500.00 U.S. It takes only an hour to learn how to use it. However, it may take one to two months of daily practice to develop a firm and settled fingertip sensation.

ACOUSTIC LASERS

HOW TO DISABLE SURVEILLANCE SATELLITES

by William Van Bise
Tecnin Research Laboratories

The history of Acoustic "Lasers" is sketchy but anecdotal accounts place the first serious attempts at utilizing acoustics in warfare with Mussolini's scientists' experimentation preceeding and during World War II. The French, apparently near the same time period, also experimented with ELF-range acoustic lenses to magnify and cohere these pulses. An article in Popular Mechanics appeared in the sixties reporting some of the results of the French experiments. It was reported that several of the scientists involved during one test of an acoustic "laser" became severely ill and another was actually killed during that test.

By following some basic principles which apply to the propagation of acoustic waves then adding to this acoustic propagation mode the appropriate electromagnetic transverse wave impulses, it is possible to produce soliton-like acoustic wave impulses which remain coherent through the atmospheric boundary layers and up through the vacuum of space. These acousto-magneto-hydrodynamic wave "packets" can be delivered as 15 pounds per square inch electro-negatively charged atmospheric "cannon balls" to a space craft or other object in orbit.

The range of frequencies involved include both ELF and RF which mutually interact in a manner such as to produce the proper collective coherent atmospheric gas "cannon balls." One of the keys to the success of producing such "cannon balls" involves the judicious employment of "end fired" array techniques and an equally important use of the proper electromagnetic frequencies which mix into a collection of electronegative "solitons." We hope to be able to demonstrate a prototype "table-top" acoustic laser.

We present some of the difficulties encountered in the construction of such a device and present a brief but succinct history of man's grappling with an understanding of acoustic phenomena. Included is a rather interesting history of such acoustic phenomena as "whispering galleries" — one of which exists at St. Paul's Cathedral in London.
