Vol. VI Number 2

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE, USPA 1986

Greetings again for 1986 -- another fascinating year of exponential growth for our grab-bag called "psychotronics." As you know, our overworked and unsung heroes -- the publications committee -- has accomplished a long-standing goal of making available more finished papers. Many were available at Lake Forest. More are ready as you read this.

The quality of USPA presentations continues to soar, as has our credibility as we continue to attract more "source" people to our ranks. Research ranging from "scalar" physics, psychoactivity, electronic medicine, health and consciousness enhancement, to more esoteric new-age instrumental "magic" has kindled a wide interdisciplinary data base and harvested lots of workable hardware. And in order to continue a balanced forum, your board's decision is to keep our platform open to anyone of good will doing interesting work and not lean toward "left brain" research in an effort at "respectability." Let the establishment folks come to us; we owe the skeptics precious little indeed.

Local chapters are growing like Topsy. Our Los Angeles group, overflowing to the rafters, has just gone to monthly meetings.

We've recently welcomed a number of previously unaffiliated resources to our ever-expanding family, and these many new friends and supporters find understanding and acceptance in the ranks of USPA. Encouragement from persons of like mind goes a long way toward accelerating progress.

Our universal goals seem to be based on the desire to give people back to themselves and deliver us from the hands of vested interests -- be they medical, "pseudo-religious," political, or scientific dogmatism. Experimental and theoretical progress in free energy, health, awareness, personal growth, life extension and more seems to emerge daily. With a little help from our friends, we'll all get there a bit sooner.

USPA will remain your open forum. Let's pull together for mutual evolution. And there's always space for honest controversy.

And, finally, we're working to insure that future conference accommodations will be as comfortable as we can make them in keeping with the excellence of our programs. Our annual get-togethers should be fun as well as an unbeatable intellectual feast.

God bless you all -- the buck stops here.

IT'S ALL IN THE MIND WITH NEW CONCEPTS IN PSYCHOMETRIC DEVICES

Radionic-type devices have changed very little since the days of Albert Abrams and Ruth Drown, and the majority of devices are copies of the original units with some variations by the builders.

Resistance or capacitor tuners such as those produced by Abrams, Drown, De la Warr, Copen, Hieronymus, and Kelly are in abundance throughout the world today. They all work depending on the intent of the user. The human mind is the controlling factor in the success or failure of the results, regardless of the hardware. Even quartz crystals can be programmed to perform in the same manner as conventional devices.

It is a well-known fact that a box with nothing but numbered dials, without being wired, will work if the user "believes" and uses the hardware as a concentration intensifier. Present-day devices, tied into simple or sophisticated computers, do no better than a simple one-dial box. Only the price is different -- in some cases several thousands of dollars.

The least important factor in any of the boxes is the rates. A list of items that the rates represent will also work just as efficiently as dialing the numbers, regardless of whether resistors or capacitors are being changed in values. The results are the same.

Recently, I substituted the resistance or capacitors with digital liquid crystal displays and obtained the same results. It is the "intent" that is important. If an individual using the equipment believes that he or she must have gold-colored dials or it will not work, then 'by golly' it won't work!

In today's high technology sophistication, the marketplace for electronic devices may require lots of blinking lights, whistles, bells, and lots and lots of digital readouts. It's fun and looks great, but the results still depend on who puts the witness in the well of the machine.

In the summer of 1958 I met Dr. Ruth Drown and was given a grand tour of her clinic in Los Angeles, California, including an explanation and a look inside her radio-vision camera. Also included was a tour of the darkroom where the camera was used and the processing procedure of the 8 x 10 film used for the X-ray type photographs. I was surprised to learn that there was no wiring connecting the electron tubes and other electronic components. When I asked Dr. Drown about the unwired components, she explained that the bio-electricity energy of the human went from component to component without requiring wires.

The atlas of rates which derive from rates of vibrations of organic and inorganic materials is, of course, the series of numbers representing whatever the item may be and can be anything desired by the operator, or what is established by the builder. These numbers represent the gravitational waves, scalar waves, or whatever one chooses to call this strange energy. In recent times many people in the psychronic field have decided that these rates of vibrations, as Dr. Albert Abrams called them, were or are electromagnetic frequencies. It is easy to believe that they are because they do follow paths of wiring and light waves and behave somewhat like the EM waves.

In my experience it has been found that a tuned resonant LC constant circuit will nullify the signal and cause it to zero out, quite unlike an EM signal but more like an electrostatic pulse. In Dr. Abrams' time radio was in its infancy and was a wonderful new invention, so it was natural for the radionic experimenters of that era to use broadcast radio components in the boxes made in the early 1920's. Because of the availability of this type of component, they became locked into this concept.

Many radios in that era used untuned RF amplifiers which were what (continued)

we call RC circuits composed of resistance-capacity and the electron tube. These elements were the good ones and today's integrated circuit technology employs these components in the integrated circuits, except for the electron tubes. The human body's signal circuits also behave like the on-off digital signals. The neurons in our brain fire like a switch being turned off or on. Our entire nervous system behaves in this manner.

In 1963 Bob Beck and I and several others experimented with the Lakhovsky MWO. Bob updated one of the original devices to a small portable unit. At that time using a Model T Ford spark coil produced the basic oscillator signal. This sparking switch operating the coil produced the Tesla gravitational wave. This on-off signal produced various pulse rates depending on the adjustable gap. This on-off was a digital signal. This type of signal produces a series of pulse repetition rates and is the key to gravitational waves.

The digital type signal is not a sine wave. Some builders of radionic equipment would like us to believe that by inserting coils from a function generator using sine wave signals into the input well of their instruments, that they are effective and produce fantastic results. Square waves, spike waves and similar waveforms more nearly represent the Tesla gravitational waves and are effective. Sine waves from audio amplifiers sound beautiful in music -- like James Galway's great flute music (a flute produces the truest sine wave signal) -- but as functional signals in psychotronics they are virtually worthless.

The spark discharges that Tesla produced in the 1890's were gravitational waves or zero point radiations, and according to Richard Lefors Clark, Ph. D., this type of signal produces a wavelength at a frequency of 10 (to the 12th power) Hertz. This area in the EM spectrum is the start of the optical radiation. Dr. Clark terms this area "spectrum optical gravity Hertz interface area."

One hundred years ago John Keely, inventor, was working in acoustical levitation and found that there are many frequency ranges in the EM spectrum which can control gravity, starting at the low end of 7.83 Hertz -- the earth resonance. Audio frequencies are, 73.5, 690, and 6,450 Hertz. The frequencies 7.83 and 690 are the strongest and easy to produce. Dr. Clark researched these data.

Spark discharges and digital signals and some others are in fact gravitational waves, including the human mind. Between the right and left hemispheres is the zero point. This energy can be demonstrated in spoon bending.

My experience with the Bob Beck-designed MWO back in 1963 has led to the present-day digital circuit design device which we call "Auto Spectra Resonator." This psychotronic device produces a broadcast signal similar to the Beck MWO.

Summary of Paper Presented by E. A. Rauscher, Ph.D.

CRITERION AND EVIDENCE FOR THE EXISTENCE OF A PHENOMENON

We are concerning ourselves with personal and collective investigations and experiences of what conventional scientists term anomalous phenomena, borderline science, or pseudo-science. Some of the phenomena and experiences people are exploring relate to personal philosophy or health; other investigations are centered around the scientific paradigm.

There are many issues to examine in regard to the criterion for truth and validity. In any case, we explore to know, understand, and utilize knowledge for ourselves and others. All human endeavor involves purpose and meaning, whether scientific, mystical, philosophical, artistic or religious. Each human exploration has its own method of approach, purpose and outcome. (continued)

In other papers we have explored the commonality and differences in the scientific and mystical approaches. The methodologies and approaches are quite distinct, but some of the underlying principles may operate under apparently common principles such as cosmic unity in mystical and non-local connectedness of Bell's theorem in science. Another example may be the concept of karma (in mystical) or causality (in science).

Some domains of investigation of phenomena which used to be considered mystical were later brought under the domain of science. For example, comets were once thought to be "the hand of God"; later scientists said comets are a ball of rock and ice with a gas cloud. Perhaps the latter does not preclude the former. In history, as the scientific method became a more dominant method for the search for truth in the western world, more phenomena considered mystical were explained by the methodology of science.

What I plan to explore in this report is the detailed nature of the scientific method and its application. We will also explore the various areas of anomalous phenomena and the manner in which the scientific method applies or does not apply to them. If one claims that what one is studying is a science, then the critical test of the scientific method must be applied and only with this approach will the validity of (whatever) be determined to be a scientific phenomenon. Other domains of human endeavor may remain in the domain of the mystical, or related areas, such as art, music, and poetry, to be experiences outside of science.

Some unusual or possible new phenomena meet the test of the rigors of the scientific method and are found to be reproducible and consistently exist, others will not, but we must all explore and proceed with care in order to know the truth.

UPDATE ON SOVIET SCALAR ELECTROMAGNETIC WEAPONS

The basic concept of a scalar wave and mechanisms for producing scalar wave beams are briefly reviewed. A brief historical synopsis is presented as a review. Historical incidents indicating development and types of Soviet scalar electromagnetic weapons are presented and interpreted.

New material for unique mechanisms against armored vehicles, personnel, aircraft, missiles and helicopters is presented. Specific instances of testing are given, including Soviet Hind helicopter use of scalar EM "death rays" against Afghanistan personnel. Specific signatures of the anti-personnel death ray are discussed.

Destruction mechanisms for use against installations, communications, artillery, ammunition, fuel and electronic circuits are presented and discussed.

A detailed presentation of the various types of anti-missile modes is included. Signatures of testing of these modes, and incidents showing those signatures, are presented and discussed.

Biological aspects of these scalar EM weapons -- such as disease, emotion, and behavior induction -- are presented and briefly discussed. Relation to the Kaznachev experiments is discussed. The potential for using the Woodpecker grid against entire populations is pointed out.

A novel ABM mechanism is presented, and startling details of its probable testing against U.S. shuttle launches are given.

Application of these weapons underground, on the earth's surface, in the air, in space, under the ocean, on the ocean's surface, and above the ocean are presented in detail.

Some of the probable major aspects of an overall Soviet deception plan to deceive the west as to the existence and power of these new superweapons are briefly presented.

A solar system limitation on unrestricted use of scalar electromagnetic weapons is presented. In the solar system, the sun, earth and moon form a coupled scalar system, in equilibrium, of primary importance. Each component of this triad scalar system is constantly in giant scalar radiation exchange with each other component. Imprudent artificial scalar perturbation of one component -- such as the earth -- could result in excessive stimulation of another component -- such as the sun -- if a coupled resonance is overstimulated. The resulting backlash on the earth and the user could prove catastrophic.

It is argued that the Soviet Union has steadily developed, deployed, and tested large scalar EM systems which are capable not only of nullifying the U.S. triad strategic deterrent, but also are capable of inadvertently destroying the earth itself along with all humanity.

It is also argued that a new type of U.S. strategic deterrent is urgently required to gain time, and a direct solution of the problem of man's inhumanity to his fellow man is required if man is not to totally destroy himself in the not too distant future.

THE LIVING SPHERE

As human beings with intelligence we find ourselves on this planet Earth. Our planet is a sphere. Our closest neighbor is the moon, another sphere. We see the sun, a brilliant, energy-emitting sphere. And we see the millions of stars, all spherical, in vortex-shaped masses called galaxies.

Here on our planet most of the so-called civilized people are involved in lives which produce results detrimental to the natural energies of the earth. To have a full understanding of our purpose on this planet we must understand it as a living entity, as all the planets and stars are living spheres.

This paper centers on the understanding of the formation of the galactic vortexes and spheres from the non-dogmatic core from which all dogmatic religions, sciences and philosophies emerge.

The four elements of the ancients are explored and understood as living cells of our space-time matrix. Experimental data is presented to show the validity of this system. Earth, air, fire and water will be known as the living components of the original source of all -- Ether: the combined power of the four.

Various systems of the etheric elements are compared in light of states of matter, chakra assembly, the Buddhist Stupa, the ethers of Rudolph Steiner, and the application of all these to living in harmony with the natural path of energy.

Physical plane radionic equipment is seen as a preliminary stage of spiritual learning in our convoluted, earth-destructive society. Higher forms of radionics are explored. The Tibetan Book of the Dead (Bardo Thodol) is a handbook to guide us in how we radionically interact with our environment, and how Karma is a result of our interaction with projections of ourselves.

Practical applications of these concepts are congruent with the works of Viktor Schauberger. A view of how to better our lives and the life of our Mother Earth is presented to awaken people to the living ethers forming and enveloping them as they pass through space-time.

THE THEORY OF GHOSTS

Both authors have been interested in the topic of ghosts since childhood, when most people think that they have perceived such phenomena. In this paper we explore some of the evidence for the existence of ghost-like phenomena and the possibility that these phenomena exist.

From time immemorial, human beings have told ghost stories. People from different cultures and civilizations have feared, revered and worshipped phenomena involving ghost-like aberrations. As Ernst Mach put it, "The true mother of religion is the fear of ghosts." In many of these religions, ghosts were perceived to be the spirit or soul of the dead who have returned or have stayed on earth and made "themselves" known to the living in one manner or another. It is only recently, with the advent of science, that the concept of existence of ghosts has been rejected.

In other papers we have explored the existence and nature of such phenomena as ESP, psychokinesis, and psychic healing. Ancients claimed these phenomena to exist and in general this has been rejected by the current scientific community. Yet there appears to be ample evidence for their existence.

In this paper we explore the history, beliefs and descriptions of ghosts and ghost-like phenomena.

The standard definition of a ghost is the soul or spirit of a deceased person, a disembodied spirit imagined (or real) to be wandering among, or haunting, living persons. People's descriptions of ghosts tell of apparitions, phantoms, phantasms, spooks, specters, spirits, or wraiths -- usually something associated with "something weird" or "unearthly." Often people have identified ghosts or spirits with an aspect that is terrifying or of malevolent intent, while others have associated them with supernatural beings, perhaps never embodied, and perceive them as good or benevolent or an apparition of God. Ghosts have also been associated with the presence of a spirit of a friend or relative, often perceived at or close to the time of the person's death.

Reported phenomena of ghosts or specters appear to fall into two relatively distinct categories: (1) that of a single event in space and time "observed" by one or more observers; or (2) an event that recurs at a specific location and is observed by a number of observers at different times. For example, the latter description may relate to an event of high intensity (such as a murder which produces a psychometric imprint on a location within the space-time manifold).

Two tables accompany the paper. The first lists types of events associated with ghost-like appearances. The second table lists some of the possible explanations of these events. Some so-called hauntings are associated with a single appearance, while others are associated with recurring experiences "seen" by one or more observers.

We will explore a number of theoretical models, concepts and beliefs about ghosts or apparitions as well as reported observations, perceptions and data. We will address issues such as the possible limitations and inadequacy of Aristotelian logic in looking at issues concerned with the nature of reality, which includes perceptions, sensations and consciousness. Within this context we will also address the possible limitations of the scientific method when addressing such phenomena as ghosts, psychokinesis, shamanistic practices, etc.

The topic of ghosts and ghost-like phenomena fundamentally challenges our understanding of nature and our belief as to what we know and to what degree we understand reality. Despite the great success of current technology, and the general belief that is held that we quite well understand the workings of man and nature, these authors believe that in fact we know very little about the nature of reality and the workings and processes of our beings. THE MYSTERY OF THE PLANETARY GRID --
THE SECRET OF ADVANCEMENT INTO HIGHER CONSCIOUSNESS

Few people realize that the Ark of the Covenant was the control panel for the intricate system of Solitron energy known as the planetary grid. This system had several reasons for being developed, with the main two being to keep the planet in orbit and to advance humanity into higher planes of consciousness.

The Elders of this planet realized that humanity could not be trusted with advanced technology, so they built the grid system to prevent the total destruction of the world. Fearing that humanity would use their gifts of technology to destroy the earth, they developed this Solitron energy system to keep the planet in orbit.

Near the end of the period called Atlantis, this grid system was constructed with the use of pyramids, domes, obelisks, mounds and many other forms of collectors and electromagnetic tuners. The system is not hard to understand if you have the simple knowledge of Solitron/Standing Columnar wave energy patterns. The pyramids and domes collect cosmic energy and force it into an energy pattern called a Standing Columnar wave. The obelisk is a tuning device for this energy pattern. It draws this energy from the collectors by a horizontal Solitron wave and attunes it to a frequency that is designed into the obelisk. The Washington Monument and the U.S. Capitol Building set up such a system to bring in a tuned frequency from the grid system.

What we will do in this paper is to explain how this energy was used all over the world to advance consciousness. The human body is an electromagnetic tuning device, Standing Columnar wave. In every ancient culture on this planet the Elders, Medicine Men or Priests had the wisdom to use and maintain this planetary grid. The American Indian was no exception. There are mounds and pyramids all over the two American continents. The Red Man knows how to balance the area so that he could grow crops that are electromagnetically balanced. Again, if we are to save the land and produce bigger yields, we must remember the simple process of attuning the earth to the planetary grid and develop the simple principles of the Indian.

The grid was built to benefit mankind and to raise his consciousness into the wisdom of electromagnetic chemistry. The Indian knows the simple ways to rebuild the electromagnetic fields set up by the grid. It is time we study these methods so that we can advance this planet into higher consciousness.

INSTANTANEOUS INTERACTIONS

Quantum theory allows for instantaneous interactions between particles separated spatially. David Bohm explicitly derived an instantaneous interaction potential from the Schroedinger equation called the "quantum potential." The implications are discussed.

Electromagnetic theory also predicts instantaneous fields in the static mode. The possibility of generalization to instantaneous waves is discussed.

Finally, a theory of space-time is presented in which the basic nature of space-time arises from the zero-point-energy fluctuations of a pre-geometric point. The concept of a pre-geometric point implies instantaneous connections among all space-time points. The concept of instantaneous interactions connects all individual things to the whole, thus restoring a wholeness that was lost with the advent of the industrial age. (End)

Abstract of Paper Presented by Sam Lentine.

METABOLIC PATHWAYS FOR PSYCHOCHEMICAL MECHANISMS

Many problems which are labeled psychosomatic in nature have as their two major components biochemical and psychic, as the term implies. The paper lays emphasis on the intimate connection between mind and body, with regard to various psychic processes.

As an indicator of possible disorders, the pH of venous plasma serves to provide a vital source of information about psychic manifestation in the physical body. One can determine the nature of a disorder by measuring this pH. We then proceed to show that one cannot ascribe a particular disorder to any given pH outside a range. What must be considered, rather, are the many possible mechanisms depending on the particular metabolic pathway sought by the given processes.

Nutritional changes can often bring radical changes in the pH under control. However, it is found that what is also a major consideration is the coupling of various metabolic paths. Depending on the degree of this coupling, there are varying degrees of sensitivity to these nutritional factors.

These processes are linked to thermodynamic and field considerations, and it is shown that certain scalar wave patterns give rise to an increase in the entropy of the system, thus leading to psychosomatic disorder. We then discuss the optimization of psychic factors through the regulation nutritional and energy balancing techniques.

TIME DILATION AND THE GRAVITY POTENTIAL

A methodology is introduced which leads to techniques for manipulating the local environmental flow of time as experienced by humans and objects. These local changes in time can easily be accomplished by varying scalar potentials or tensors rank two (i.e., the gravity potential). These local time changes, which are known as time dilations and contractions, can be measured using specially designed devices. Two devices are presented, along with some examples of data.

AN ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE SYSTEM
FOR ANALYZING PSYCHOTRONIC DATA

This presentation will describe an expert artificial intelligence computer software system, its component parts, some artificial intelligence techniques, and how such a system can be used to analyze psychotronic data. The system, in addition to the usual hierarchical data structures, utilizes associational links. Data items are tagged with researcher name, date, time and place. This is important because, as most people know, psychotronic data can fluctuate dynamically in real time and space. The system is designed for iterative expansion. The system searches for re-occurring patterns.

COHERING THE ZERO-POINT ENERGY

Cohering the zero-point energy may be argued as theoretically possible in today's physics by applying Prigogine's thermodynamics to the non-linear descriptions of the zero-point energy and its interaction with matter. Convincing proof of this occurrence can only come with experiments. The discussion is intended to motivate the following experimental investigations:

1. Creating a dynamic, bucking, electromagnetic field condition to launch a hypothesized scalar wave.
2. Creating abrupt ion motion to launch a hypothesized vacuum polarization wave.
3. Creating a plasma ion-acoustic vortex to induce a hypothesized macroscopic zero-point energy coherence.

A successful experimental result could demonstrate power transmission along thin wires without heating, penetration of electromagnetic shielding, ball lightning, gravitational anomalies, and/or anomalous energy production. The experiments are designed to clarify where a zero-point energy transduction may be occurring in many of the inventions where anomalous energy production is claimed.

HOLOLINGUISTIC TECHNOLOGY

COMPUTER-ASSISTED SYSTEMIC EVALUATION

As you read this page, your mind is receiving many different messages simultaneously. Part of your conscious mind is decoding these symbols and transforming them into English "words" while it is simultaneously interpreting the spatial patterns of the "picture" at the top of the page. Another part of your mind is responding to the color, texture and odor of the paper, and to the chemistry of the paper and ink. Each of these messages represents a form of communication. Each form of communication has its own "linguistic." The sum of these, plus other forms of communication, we call Hololinguistics. The INTERRO is a computer-based Hololinguistic system. It is designed to communicate information to, and receive responses from, that part of the mind which controls body function. It translates this information into the language of numbers and words understood by the conscious mind.

After three years of intensive research (18,000 patients) on prototypes, the Interro was introduced in the spring of 1986. The basic autogenic response measurement technique that has been used in Europe has advanced by a quantum leap due to "computer-assisted systemic evaluation." The Interro software and hardware run on IBM PC-compatible computers. Since the field of Hololinguistics will advance rapidly, this modular system has been designed to be maintained at "State of the Art" for many years at minimal upgrade expense. Electrodiagnosis is enhanced by virtual lists of over 1,800 testable items. Digital meter and oscilloscope display may be printed. A menu-driven program controls screen display.

AMENDMENTS TO USPA BY-LAWS

The following two amendments to the USPA by-laws were passed at the General Meeting of the USPA held July 18, 1986 at Lake Forest College, Lake Forest, Ill.:

ARTICLE V, MEMBERSHIP

Section 1.1 General. Any citizen of the United States of America, or any citizen of countries with contiguous borders (i.e., Canada and Mexico) interested in psychotronics is eligible to become a General Member.

ARTICLE VI, BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Section 1. After the last sentence of this paragraph add the following:
"and a Director shall be a United States of America citizen."

The objective of these amendments is to allow the very active Canadian and Mexican current affiliates to become full members, open local chapters, and participate fully in the activities of the USPA. Requiring a Director to be a U.S. citizen maintains U.S. control of USPA and its legal requirements.
